

Write a letter to a family member recounting your week at home/in school

Keep a diary, recording your thoughts and feelings, and summarising some of the key events of your day – it could take the form of a scrapbook.

Go on a short walk in your local area. Record any key landmarks, e.g. post box, church, roundabout, bus stop etc. Draw a map of the route you took, create a key. Write the directions for others to follow your route.

Create a poster of information and advice to help people to stay safe and keep healthy at home / at school. Or offer advice as to how we can continue to protect our environment.

Write a persuasive argument for parents and teachers, outlining the key reasons why you should be allowed to use your: iPad, gaming device, YouTube, hoverboard etc.

Write an explanation for parents/teachers/grandparents on how to operate a gaming controller, computer, Nintendo Switch, mobile phone etc... this could include diagrams.

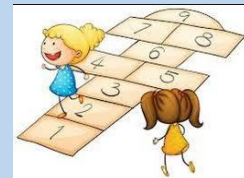

Produce some guidance for young gardeners to help them to plant and grow flowers and vegetables. Record the key information they would need in the correct order. This could take the form of a power point, leaflet or double page spread.

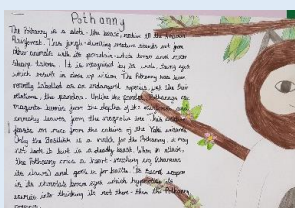

Produce a recipe book full of tasty meals and ideas to keep families well fed.

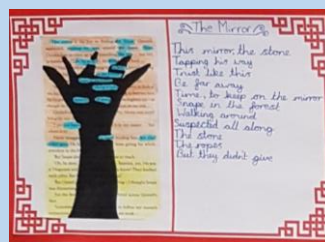

Design/invent a new game to be played at home or in school (indoors or outdoors). Make the game and write up detailed instructions on how to play it so that others can follow.

Design an imaginary creature, monster or hybrid animal. Invent a name for it, label its features. How is it adapted for its habitat? Is it dangerous? Write a detailed description to provide others with information about what it looks like, how it sounds and moves and how it behaves.

Write a 'blackout poem', creating a new poem from any text extract – just remove the words you don't want and keep the words you do to form a poem of your own. Search for examples of blackout poetry online, these can become works of art!

Write an informative report about an animal, an event that interests you, or an imaginary planet. You could present these non-chronological reports in the form of a waterfall book.
